CONSENT OF PARENTS TO MARRIAGE

FROM THE WRITINGS OF BAHÁ'U'LLAH

(65) It hath been laid down in the Bayan that marriage is dependent upon the consent of both parties. Desiring to establish love, unity and harmony amidst Our servants, We have conditioned it, once the couple's wish is known, upon the permission of their parents, lest enmity and rancour should arise amongst them. And in this We have yet other purposes. Thus hath Our commandment been ordained.

(Kitab-i-Aqdas, page 42)

Marriage is conditioned on the consent of both parties and their parents, whether the woman be a maiden or not.

(Synopsis and Codification of the Kitab-i-Aqdas, the Most Holy Book of Baha'u'llah, 1st edition. (Haifa, Baha'i World Center, 1973), page 39.)

FROM THE WRITINGS OF 'ABDU'L-BAHA

In this glorious Faith marriage arrangements which are made by parents for their children while the latter are young and have not yet attained the age of maturity are not acceptable. This matter is the responsibility of the couple when they attain the age of maturity.

(From a Tablet—translated from the Persian)

FROM LETTERS WRITTEN ON BEHALF OF SHOGHI EFFENDI

It is surely a very unfortunate case when the parents and children differ on some grave issues of life such as marriage, but the best way is not to flout each other's opinion nor to discuss it in a charged atmosphere but rather try to settle it in an amicable way.

(29 May 1929
to two believers.)

About the consent of parents for marriage: this is required before and also after the man or woman is twenty-one years of age. It is also required in the event of a second marriage, after the dissolution of the first whether through death or through divorce.

The parental consent is also a binding obligation irrespective of whether the parents are Baha'is or not, whether they are friendly or opposed to the Cause. In the event of the death of both parents, the consent of a guardian is not required.

(10 October 1936
to an individual believer.)

... the validity of a Baha'i marriage is conditioned upon the consent of the two parties and their parents only. So that in case the other members of your family show any dislike or opposition to your sister's union with, their approval does under no circumstances invalidate it. Your parents' approval would be sufficient, even through all the rest of your family may violently oppose it.

(31 March 1937
to two believers.)

The validity of a Baha'i marriage is dependent upon the free and full consent of all four parents. The freedom of the parents in the exercise of their right is unrestricted and unconditioned. They may refuse their consent on any ground, and they are responsible for the decision to God alone.

(19 March 1938

This great law He has laid down to strengthen the social fabric, to knit closer the ties of the home, to place a certain gratitude and respect in the hearts of children for those who have given them life and sent their souls out on the eternal journey towards their Creator. We Baha'is must realize that in present-day society the exact opposite process is taking place: young people care less and less for their parents' wishes, divorce is considered a natural right, and obtained on the flimsiest and most unwarrantable and shabby pretexts. People separated from each other, especially if one of them has had full custody of the children, are only too willing to belittle the importance of the partner in marriage also responsible as a parent for bringing those children into this world. The Baha'is must, through rigid adherence to the Baha'i laws and teachings, combat these corrosive forces which are so rapidly destroying home life and the beauty of family relationships, and tearing down the moral structure of society.

(25 October 1947
to the National Spiritual Assembly of the United States.)

The "Aqdas" requires permission of the parents for marriage. There is no mention of permission of anybody else being necessary.

(31 January 1955
to an individual believer.)

If you persevere and make it plain to the mother that you will not marry her daughter without her consent, it is quite possible she will become impressed by your devotion to your Faith, and give her permission. In any case, your Baha'i duty in the matter is quite clear.

FROM LETTERS WRITTEN BY THE UNIVERSAL HOUSE OF JUSTICE

We gain the impression from Mr.'s letter that he looks upon the law requiring consent of parents before marriage as a mere administrative regulation, and does not realize that this is a law of great importance affecting the very foundation of human society. Moreover, he seems not to appreciate that in the Baha'i Faith the spiritual and administrative aspects are complementary and that the social laws of the Faith are as binding as the purely spiritual ones.

(4 December 1963

to a National Spiritual Assembly.)

It is perfectly true that Baha'u'llah's statement that the consent of all living parents is required for marriage places a grave responsibility on each parent. When the parents are Baha'is they should, of course, act objectively in withholding or granting their approval. They cannot evade this responsibility by merely acquiescing in their child's wish, nor should they be swayed by prejudice; but, whether they be Baha'is or non-Baha'is, the parents' decision is binding, whatever the reason that may have motivated it. Children must recognize and understand that this act of consenting is the duty of a parent. They must have respect in their hearts for those who have given them life, and whose good pleasure they must at all times strive to win.

(1 February 1968

to the National Spiritual Assembly of the United States.)

Baha'is who cannot marry because of lack of consent of one or more parents could consult with their Local Spiritual Assembly, to see whether it may suggest a way to change the attitude of any of the parents involved. The believers, when faced with such problems, should put their trust in Baha'u'llah, devote more time to the service, the teaching and the promotion of His Faith, be absolutely faithful to His injunctions on the observance of an unsullied, chaste life, and rely upon Him to open the way and remove the obstacle, or make known His will.

(9 September 1969

to an individual believer.)

While we have the greatest sympathy for the individuals involved in these unfortunate circumstances, we can reach no other conclusion but that consent of parents must be obtained in all cases before marriage can take place. Obedience to the laws of Baha'u'llah will necessarily impose hardships in individual cases. No one should expect, upon becoming a Baha'i, that his faith will not be tested, and to our finite understanding of such matters these tests may occasionally seem unbearable. But we are aware of the assurance which Baha'u'llah Himself has given the believers that they will never be called upon to meet a test greater than their capacity to endure.

(29 January 1970

to the National Spiritual Assembly of the Hawaiian Islands.)

Foster parents or relatives who may act in loco parentis are not required by Baha'i law to give their consent to the marriage of the children they raise although there is no objection to the children obtaining such consent, should they wish to do so.

(9 April 1970

to the National Spiritual Assembly of Italy.)

The consent required by the Kitab-i-Aqdas is the consent of the parents of the parties to the marriage. No one else can give this consent, and the Universal House of Justice is not empowered to change the law in any way nor to waive the requirement.

(10 April 1973

to an individual believer.)

In the Baha'i Faith it is the right of each individual to choose without duress his future partner in marriage and the freedom of the parents in exercising their right to give or refuse consent is unconditional...

(11 April 1978

to a National Spiritual Assembly.)

As to whether you may continue indefinitely to seek your parents' consent, there is nothing in the law of Baha'u'llah to prevent this, but no engagement should be announced until consent has been obtained.
