DEDICATION

C\ GOD, Thou knowest I ^^ With what few and things slight,
Form, music, colour and my power of words,
Created heaven in this deathly place.
Aye, as I struggled for the air I breathe
And seized my bread and water from the earth
By toil and pain,
Thou knowest, God, I built a little heaven,
An atmosphere, a dream
More fixed than hills beside the ocean,
Where I have lived content.
God, if Thou hast not to struggle,
If Thou art free in fact as I in dream,

In will as I in hope,
What larger heaven Thou hast built thyself!
Sometimes within this cloudy mirror
I glimpse it steadfast, and my passion hurts
Like wounded birds in storm.
O there shall I enter, no, not enter,
But I shall make its equal, stone on stone,
Thy watching architect, and dwell therein Godlike, in our good time.

T CLIMB.

The old spirit of the race, like hidden music,
Tugs at my toiling feet and hands,
Beats on my thought. I pause;

The whole world dances to a strange sad measured tune.

Baffled to reach sheer heights of silence
I close my ears. The world shall dance,
But dance from my own spirit's rhythm !

Deafened, I climb.

The old spirit of the race, dawn-mist,
Taking a thousand lights and gleams,
A sheen perceptible on peak and plain,
Tangles the flow of river, the stillness of tree,
The action of men in labour.
Beauty The spirit of the race proclaims.

! But I
No longer perplexed, seeking the sun's pure blaze Life's colour shall be the hues of my own dream !

I close my sight, and blinded, climb.

Suddenly, gaining the utmost peak,
Opening my eyes, I see beneath the sun United in an unguessed radiant glory io Creation
The whole world changed, created, re-created Mine, mine to love and know And,

Giving my ears and senses their desire,
Silence at first, then slowly arising,
The flux of musical rhythm swift and deep Binding all things in one tremendous march,
The glad progression of my conscious spirit !

Now, kneeling in speechless wondering gratitude, Pierced through by free, creative wills and moods,
I give myself to this, the common earth
Redeemed, dissolved in my long-prayed-for vision !

Men, rivers, trees to you I turn again,

Too strong for hate, too humble for doubt and fear, Descending from this peak of ecstasy
To change your drugging music for this paean,
To drive away your pestilent dangerous beauty
For this renewing, soul-seen living sun !

The Well Beloved 1 1

The Well Beloved

f\ THE well beloved, fortunate men and women

Fortunate, !

They show the only authentic virtue Desirable in every race and clime :

To be at home in one's own soul
And comfortably fit, like a student's gown,
The folds and wrinkles of one's nature.
I love to fall upon one of them suddenly
Just out the window, or round the corner,
When I am vacant or grieving or hateful ;
I know them by a secret sympathy,
And I go straightway healed, as by a spell,
Strutting a little, hearty, bold, superb, Spilling over, in short, as a man's life often should.

I remember each of them I've seen :

Such days are mirrors hung against my hope.
There's one, now, leaned beside a mossy well,
Dipping his fingers, lingering.

Within his eyes I saw

Continual amazement, the revelation
Of sheer meanings in things blinked at, passed over, since,

Well, Wordsworth, we'll say ;

And one that followed a rebel mob all night
To feel the human pulse at point of bursting.

(And when he came again among us So strangely catholic, titan he, we stared in awe.)

And one that stood before an antique desk
Pondering old difficult words in a parchment book,

1 2 Creation

Seldom turning a page, so deep he peered
Into the lost childhood and mystery of time Glimmering through the philosophic Greek ;
And then another (he too, an old, old man) Whose sweeping beard fell down and almost hid
The tawny violin he pressed Rapturously to him, like a new mother; and I waited Impatient for a fierce music to stab me ecstatic, (But he deeply, deeply listening
To some old master or some grave inward tune Forgot me, though I coughed.)
O, O the well beloved !

Who taught them the true secret of being Over our heads who wait but hear it not ?
They never hurry, never disintegrate their souls,
Fill the moment and the life-time richly up ;

Grow to the time and place they find themselves Inevitably, like the weather,
And seem to a casual passer-by
The very spirit of the brook or forest,
Its human symbol, its reality ;
Become the lordly genius of all knowledge
That holds the piecemeal generations Fixed to a conscious, unifying will.
They are not many,
But where you meet but one or two There's the rare odour in the world's garden,
The poignant taste in the soul's wine,
The essence that memory feeds upon,
Sick of the common waste of life,
TO write a noble record or a joyous dream.
In a Factory 13

In a Factory

GMOKY, monotonous rows
Of half-unconscious men
Serving, with lustreless glance and dreamless mind,
The masterful machines ;
These are the sons of herdsmen, hunters,
Lords of the sunlit meadow,
The lonely peak,
The stirring, shadow-haunted wood,
Of mariners who swung from sea to sea
In carven ships
And named the unknown world :

Hunters, herdsman, sailors, all
By trade or chase or harvest
Winning their substance
Rudely, passionately like a worthy game
With a boy's great zest of playing.
O labour,
Whoso makes thee an adventure
Thrilling to the nervous core of life,
He is the true Messiah,
The world's Saviour, long-awaited, long-wept-for.
14 Creation

In a Cafe

H'OW the grape leaps upward to Thirsty for the sun !
life,

Only a crushed handful, yet
Laughing for its freedom from the dark
It bubbles and spills itself,
A little sparkling universe new-born.
Well, higher within my blood and ecstasy You'll sunward rise, O grape,
Than ever on the slow, laborious vine.

In a Cafe 1

In a Cafe

ii

T DRAIN it, then,
Wine o' the sun, sun-bright,
And give it fuller life within my blood,
A conscious life of richer thought and joy.
And yet,
That too will perish soon like withered leaves Athirst for an ultimate sun
Upon the soul's horizon.
Come down, O God, even to me,
And drain my being as I drank the grape,
That I, this moment's perfect thing,
Live so for ever.

A Gauguin

'O see, know, passionately take to heart

I

The terrible beauty, in feature and in soul,
Of one I heartily, heartily hate ;
Then, possessed by her magnificence,
Wholly become it, lover-like for the time,
Create her perfect likeness, line and form,
Conspicuous for the world's astartled wonder :

This is the last mystery of art,
Moulding, with a strong, slow, hate-masterful hand,
The delicate mask of some tormenting beauty.

A Pastel

Vf ONDER the towered city, yonder the world . . .

A heart-beat more, and surely from the East Another land will show
Its delicate promise native to our joy
Over the mauve and silver twilight :

The soul of some remote, unguessed Japan.

Les Morts 17

Les Morts

CTRANGELY between the darkness and my heart

The lost eyes shine,
And hands, fonder than all desire,
Pass slowly on my hair and face.
Whispers, arising from old depths of dream,
Hover within my thought, awaking tears.
How soft,
How soft and tenderly clinging Pass the hands of the dead
Over our hair in darkness.
These are they that living we could not hold,
That slipped like lustral water
Out of our hands, away ;
And all our passion, all our desperate prayer Held them, O held them not.

Myth

OD bless me ! how that rascal time
Keeps on his poet's tricks !

I'the full daylight stare of trained historians and doctors,
Under the very hands of modern bridge-builders, aeroplane-inventors and what-not,

He's imperceptibly filled my heart with a new romantic myth
Rich-flavoured as any tale Greek schoolboys heard On Attic slopes of a shepherd's holiday !

Those boys grown up and changed, those boys grown men ?
Freckles a City Mayor, three children, frock-coat and public title ?
(He swam our swimming pond three times across);
Champion a judge, his car outside the court,
Whom surely God designed a prime first baseman ?
And Hornet a clothes-importer, prominent, etc. ?
No, no !

They are not men, like all these common lives, I'll not believe it, though across the ocean
Newspapers and letters mark their late success.
No.

If they are not still young, eternal boys,
Their age has steeped itself in richer essence
And turned them into joyous demigods.
Their true life takes my memory like a myth
Vale 19

Witnessed each day by the bright holiday sun,
The glad, splashing river, the haunting odour of cherry blossoms,
And my own faithful heart, that yearns
That yearnsy demigods, not men.

O ER eyes turn mutely, patiently
Like a hurt fawn's away, moist with a sense
Of some great passionate faith or promise Broken, denied to the living-out of life.
And in the muter stillness where they stand
He sees as through an opened window
The last petal from a well-loved bough Tremble and flutter down ;

Hears, as from a neighbour orchard,
A friendly throstle flute his parting tune,
And suddenly, suddenly knows from her, from him,
That spring itself, fleeing a stricken land,
Has passed for ever.

England

T GAZE upon the golden, steaming hills, England and yield a grateful heart to thee.

What !this cottage thatched against the sun,
This April morning steeped in fallow glebe,
And not an English heart broken in rapture
To keep thee England ?
The Vandal poets wait against the coast
To conquer thee and give the land a soul.

The Plain Woman

\X7HAT is the beauty of women ?
Listen ! a song that makes the whole world sob

Its aching heart away.

But I ?

I am the silence closed about the song
That keeps it beautiful.

The Lonely Cup 21

Everyman

T CURSED, she wept ;
And from her tears and broken heart
Eden arose about me, and I stood Perfect within her beauty.
God how has that spirit hid unseen

vy ITHIN dusky room
the Betweenwhiles of the fire's insistent flap

My silver spoon taps out Like startled sentinel's musket,
The steaming tea
Hisses against the cup like far-off rapids, Whirlpools of dim alarm . . .

Impelled, I deeply gaze within the amethyst liquid Somehow become a globed, translucent fate.
Shapes, colours, figures, dreams and deeds Create, conjoin, dissolve ;
Ideas, evolutions, histories, moods and souls
Steam richly up and fill the empty room.
No broken heart, no desolation,

But life's vast wonder, changing, quick, intense,
A whole fellowship of things imminent and real, Portentous times to come, sweetens for me
The lonely cup.

Skyscrapers

A FOREST of strange palms

That stir not, nor sway in the wind, Nor nod sleepy at evening, nor reach to nestling birds

A warm and comfortable mossy bough ;

Strange giant palms

Rigid and sternly fixed in the purple sunset.

One day the loud vexed ocean

Will drive a furious tempest from the East

To lash your stony trunks,

To tear your earth-devouring roots

And shake upon a shore deserted

This terrible fruit of flame long petrified.

Homeward

I 'HERE is no other bosom for a grown man
To sob his whole heart-bursting grief upon
Than the sweet motherhood of his own native race ;

No voice to call him back from loneliness Than his own language, uttered from the first comfortings of love

By the hushed lips of poets and faithful women

Speaking into the great darkness

That he, in his dark time, may turn homeward again and find

The world's heart warmly near.

The Dance 23

moonlight steeps the jungle-glade,

* And all the movement, all the pulse of night,

Gathers within the hollow-sounding ocean.

Long, melancholy waves

Beat nature's avid life within my blood ;

An essence slips from the still trees

Freeing my thought from dream.

I rise,

Mute as a foeless, mateless sea-deep monster
Heaving through livid, phosphorescent caves
Its bulk of terrible hunger seeking prey.
As one great staring Thing the brutal crowd, Passion-distended,
Rolls ponderously out its whole slow length,
The avid, pitiless will of huddled men
Absorbing into one vapid, bottomless soul
Its long-craved prey of pleasure.
The dancers flutter, dazzling Its vacant eye ;

These girls with shining trays of heaped fruit
And wines from the world's mad reckless south Steep drowsily Its wandering senses ;
Deafened by changing music, It grows partly glad.
How did I come a part of this huge Thing,
Myself so harmless ?
Yet I too fled from my own hateful gloom,
From many a biting sorrow,
Gladly forgetting myself and others
To surge with these the warm sleek blazing house,
The house of carnival.

26 Creation

So the monster dies, Its bloated power Dissolves in tears. I look and deeply know
The secret parts, like me, of the corpulent Thing,
The avid men and women of the crowd.
And O these dancing girls, this glittering fruit
The Thing gluttoned Its empty heart upon,
'Twas all the broken pieces of old joy,
The fragments of our man and woman dream
Which, blindly coming together,
We sought amid these changing lights and sounds
To take, to gather up, fragment by fragment,
And shape into one conscious soul again.
I, when the rear gate of my life opens,
From all such tragic hypocritic days Shall turn to the far mountain of my secret will,
That stark, still place, to build a small cottage there Beside a whispering brook,
To sit alone and think of many things.

The Egoist
CHE has no soul.
Her almond eyes diminish to a spark
And change the sun to amber.

When she looks at me
I draw without myself and pass, unwilling,
The strange lids of her eyes, and enter A garden that knows no law, Sowed with imaginations like a god's.
I enter and become Another self, drunken
By new thoughts and hot-pulsed danger.
I long to sing, to prove my madness,
Dancing away from habit,
Responsibility and the grave laws of soul.
A woman has no right to perilous thoughts.
She has no soul, and O,
I lose my own, and all my satisfied past, Desiring her."

28 Creation

They
CHE, with smile of wrinkled stone,
Watched Lola dance.

Like naked flames
Blown dazzling by a masterful wind Frantic with conflagration, leaping on To seize intolerable smokeless heights j

Like branches, laurel and bay, Gently, soberly borne by virgin girls
In white procession
To lay upon some holy monument ;

Like stars that light through storm Astonishing the soul
Two stars above the rushing tempest poised Her hair, her limbs, her eyes :

O God ! how Lola danced !

He
Wearied a little, gray before his time, Polite, attentive . . .
apathetic . . .

Quickened, knew within his blood Suddenly the old adventure ;
Within his thought
The tense, creative pull and tingle of life

Hertha 29

The vision
Knew himself in Loia, and leaned

With eyes and heart and will
To seize this marvel
And make its essence eternally his own.

She, with smile of wrinkled stone,
Watched Lola dance.

Hertha
tXQUISITE to her slow silk's rustle
Nay its echo
Who save one hate-tortured might say how perfect
This woman's silken and perfumed exquisite Feminine beauty ?
30 Creation

The Girl
C HE plagues me with the rapture of my sex ;

bring her flowers and kisses,

I breathe her hair

And dream against her breasts ;

splash her limbs with water from a pool.

Then, inspired to something of my manhood,

sing to her, and to myself, a song,

The song of Eve :

But frightened she laughs aloud

And runs and hides within the sleepy wood.

I follow, sobbing.

The Encounter

DOOR shivering girl,

All eyes

That swim in timid wonder,

Hungry, forlorn ; street-corner girl,

How the stupid world has starved her !

Stay, I will give her riches,

Not bread and wine and pearls,

(Those eyes were never starved for bread alone !)-

But love, soft kisses, ardent words

And fellow-admiration ; these

Will lid her lidless eyes, restore her soul

To vacant lip and bosom.

She

Will lie as summer dawn within my heart,
And moonlight on my imagination.

The Blue Girl

CHE does not walk, like me j

She swims, an undulation, a perfumed water, changing, changing.

When she is gone I try to think of her,
But dream and all desire turn inward, empty,
Her passing burns no steadfast line upon my vision
To recreate her beauty from,
Beauty, like life itself, lost in its own rhythm.
Perfume and water.

Others I could dream of, and loved my dream far more than woman.

She alone I must have, the beautiful,
Like perfumed water, flowing, flowing.

Eve's Lament

"\X7HEN I first stopped, dismayed, and wept, Caught in the tangled vines, at the world's wildness,
You swiftly came, O Adam,
Heartily bade me wait, and singing gaily
Hewed through the crowded jungle growth a way.
Lonely I waited by the cave, afraid
You never should return ; but you returned,
And standing upright in the dim home-twilight,
Kissed me, and loved me safe.

Then, when I wept once more
For rivers to be crossed and hills laid low
And the great ocean to be governed,
You heartily bade me wait, and while I waited,
Lonely and desolate at home,
You, Adam, pushed your might against the hills
And laid them low ;
Pondered a moment by the swollen streams
And bridged them ;
Flung ships across the white, rebellious seas,
And governed to your will the tide and storm.
But, each adventure done, you hastened Searching for Eve, and ever as you came

34 Creation

Brought the glad bold heart that stirred my heart, Strong manhood to my womanhood so warm,
Adventure to my adventure,
That, united in our twilit chamber,
We laughed for contentment, lapped in vision.
Never the task too hard,
Never the way too long,
But you returned, O Adam,
Joyous to me.

Now, in a moody night
I looked upon the stars, wept forlorn,
Lost within their infinite mocking spaces,
Their soulless tangle, wept, and cried aloud
To save my spirit slipping, slipping away.
The boy-heart swelled within you,
You bade me wait a little, then sped
Out to the solitary hills,
Down in the dripping pits
Pondering, and groping and dreaming,
To measure them, to master them, for me.
So long, so long I waited,
Grown cold with barren terror ;

Yet, turned thus upon myself
My womanhood awoke more fiercely,
Steeped richer passion in my heart,
Made me more lovely than a dream,
Desirable and warm.
And I danced, dreaming of your return,
Adventure to match adventure,
Vision to mate your vision ;

Then
You homeward crept, O Adam,
Dragged by unconscious habit, like a worm,
And stumbled upon the threshold empty-eyed.
Dumbly you sit apart
Amazed by the cold frame of things
As one stricken by a mortal inward fear ;
And all my passion spilled upon your lips,
And all my trembling silence
Has not restored your boyish mirth,
Has not rekindled your eyes, melted your heart,
Given your cosmic space a human feature
Nor saved me from this modern widowhood.

Eve

have you hid yourself, O Eve, Among these laughing girls,
And why are you divided, Womanhood,
Among these anxious women ?
There is no world for me,
But only silent hills and empty woods,
And restless seas and rivers,
And lights of sun and star
That bear their barren torches up and down,
And only seasons, storms and holidays ;
No soul, but only thoughts and moods
And self-tormenting dreams,
Until we mate, O Eve,
And gather all these fragment-worlds and lives
Into our large and procreant passion.

Ghosts 37

Ghosts

TF you have never lain
Against the passion of a poet's heart
In his great hour,
Created by his triumph to a queen
And known the world beneath you ;
Girl,
Go straightway to a far, deserted hill
And cry, with arms outflung,
That you are dead, not living,
Aye, mock the sun
And call the world a dream ;
Pray fiercely for birth
With words and gestures such as ghosts employ Beneath the grave
(For you are one with them !),
Do so
And I, whose hour passed on Without the mating heart, the comrade arms,
The poet loneliest in his vision, I Will follow you, Ogirl,
And mingle with your bitterest sob Silence less sweet.

Eve's Daughter

have tamed me, O
Eve's daughter !

The promise of veiled eyes,

The passion of newly opened arms,
Breasts' opulence at twilight,
All the vision I sought to mould of life
(The man-dream, womanhood),
You tenderly seize, you change, Eve's daughter.
All womanhood is you, Eve's daughter,
And touched by you with something still and far,
An awe, remote as stars.
Eyes shine with new promise,
Arms' passion creates a new desire, a longing
To enter life's unravishable heart
You, only you can still.
O, you have tamed me, child,
Eve's daughter . . . and mine.
Love 39

Love
"THIS is the way, O girl, of love divine
That men and women, rooted in earth's soil
With trees and dogs, ignore :

My conscious and abundant passion
For life in God,
Directed by your unawakened beauty,
Pours out in ardent words and warm embraces,
And stirs the soul within you :

Aye, I give you soul, new life and being From my abundance, Wake you in stainless, masterful ecstasy
From your long earthly sleep ;
And you arise, conscious, grateful, devoted (/ love as blind hearts say).

Then, the steep wave spent,
My head upon your lap, my hands relaxed,
A great emptiness where I had hailed my soul,
You, O conscious girl,
Will know to render me a soul again
With ardent hands and voice, with joyous will,
And I shall rise
Your mate, restored against your need.
Ah, amid the ruin of all worlds and lives,
Our being shall not fail.
Nay,
We two shall live for ever.

Brightness of many limbs and wondering eyes
A calm still garden : dawn : leaves that slowly Yield to sleepy breezes glimmering fountains

On peering faces Odours that steep the essence of magic Dream of infinite passion to be Women

Women unwearily keeping their beauty perfect Sheltered in shady gardens Limbs and breasts and eyes
Suddenly
Crashing forgotten gates in thunderous war-song
Men, thrust by desire hands outstretching enter

The Dreamer
the Father in His easy chair pondering the great book of Vision Lets fall a casual hand the while He broods tremendously the word ;
And on his little stool beside the human child, restless for play,
Takes the slack ringers in his busy grasp, Fondles them, tracing the great grave philosophic lines and wrinkles
And rubs his cheek against the palm, kissing it all over with a sudden fondness ;
But fallen from his little stool, and crying aloud, Pulls at the casual Hand and whimpers for a word, a glance,
All in vain, now and for ever ;
For God the Father is quite lost in the terrible endless Vision,
And from the height whereon He broods sunk in His easy chair,
Only the casual Hand falls down, the slack, forgetful fingers,
Tear- wet or kissed, gently relax, nor close the Book, nor lift the child.

O Brutes and Dreamers !

f OULD

That God, it not be turning His essence outward Upon our world to search the things we know and live among
For some creation corresponding to His being,
Might see, when ranging these stars and worlds,
These ponderous, slow, impenetrable shapes,
Nothing, nothing ?
In all these forms that stop and prison us
Only a void wherethrough His glances pass Without resulting image ?
Could it not be
That all our universe to Him is unsubstantial, Unreal, inane ?
And, passing from thence (which is nowhere) to us, These active, self-impressing souls, their moods and states,
Their terrible energy of good and evil,
These also make no image on His thought,
Not even echo, shadow, memory ?
But, wherever a vision-caught spirit of man
In self-oblivious loyalty labours on This outer world, endows it with his vision, Changes its substance, pierces it with moods Humanized, aspiring, there
O Brutes and Dreamers !
God pauses, closelier turns and knows (Not in the shaping soul or shapen world But in their perfect union),
An actual thing at last, a correspondence, Essence materialized, Himself attained,
The one reality in space and time ?
Could that not be, O brutes and dreamers, Say!

44 Creation

Reveille

T1THETHER the conscious world,
Girt round by hate and wrong and terror, Desperately defend itself
As a few brave guards and watchful captains Maintain about some lone remote fortress
A small circle of troubled peace ;
Or whether, ourselves a blind anarchy,
We vainly pit our selfishness and fear

Against a whole outer universe of law,
Admitting across the frontier from time to time Enough of God's terrible order and justice
To burn a small torch amid our inward gloom
Ah, when shall we raise our battle-blinded eyes Above this endless conflict we wage Life by life, for a mere breathing-space and foothold, Heart-knit, soul-united once both East and West Thrilled by the energy of a mutual dream, Take heed and know if brute or Prophet hold True mirror of the attributes of man.

ESCAPE from all them that hold me ;
J
The prisons and the strong stockades of love,
The deep pits of hatred, let me go.
I pass on perforce from name to name,
Assume new qualities and titles
Sewed and patched on for the day's need
From old definitions proudly fitting once
But soiled, rent and tawdry long since
Like the heaped regalia of long unfashionable kings.
I pass on, escape even from myself.
The swiftest mood and widest embracing thought Reel from my eager tortuous progression.
Nay, the whole world grins Knowingly from its mask of good and evil ;
Murderers, in utmost pity, droop before their judge,
And for the sake of the world's masquerade
Otherwise . . .

But we are all anarchists Stumbling brave and blind through a strange lost region
Bordering the stupendous ecstasy of life.
Creation

The Hill

DE not too certain, life,

(Or is that power of death, that tedious power Which with insistent sneer Shatters continually and steepes in slime
The difficult house I raise,

The house of consciousness ?)

Be not too certain of me ;

Deem me not wholly tamed,

Content with labour ineffectual

Upon this ruined house of thought ;

Or, turning to things outside,

Content to hurry a life-time through these streets

Darkened with vaster ineffectiveness

Even this sea-flung, sea-swift fog

Makes so pathetic romance of!

Count not too long upon my slavehood !

For as I have often dreamed,

There is a hill

Sloping against the dizzy, mystic sky

Whither, in a moment, I can go.

And, pausing for courageous breath

Pace after pace I'll climb

Fleeing from thee, O insufficient life,

A weak yet conscious Christ

Bearing his cross of aspiration.

O, bleeding and gasping on that hill

To me the vision of things

Already perfect, consummated, present

Sudden will rise, and I shall thrill

With powers you know not of,

Old tedious world of streets,

Inevitable failure, self-deception,

Death-in-life ;

For, writhing as I might be

In supreme pain, and broken

Upon the wheel of dissolution,

Never was so great aspiration void ;

And I shall wholly triumph

Convinced at last of my own perfect soul,

And God, the soul's desire.

An Old Prayer Resaid

TS it too much to seek

Among the living, one friend, one man or woman

To stand ever between me and the blinding glory of God,

Mirroring the pure flame to my weak eyes

And visibly to every humble sense

Showing the glory ?
Too much to seek ?
Is there not one among the breathing
Who like the demigods of old Mythed to a people's heart the manner and the way,
Will draw my thought and passion from itself,
Make me forget the dangerous mystery, Soul,
Wholly admiring, wholly intent upon a great nature Heroic, tender and calm ?

I drive
my prayer along the crowded street
But meet only a passionate, wilful race
Or here and there a wistful fellow pilgrim ;

And all the while the immanent, pitiless glory of God
Burdens and breaks my heart.

In the Mirror

T HAVE not dared to be alone These many months, but passed with all the world,
A driven ghost, through the black magic
That we call life; till now
My mirror suddenly bids me halt.
Before its dimly lighted depths I pause
Seeking the image I have known, serene, heroic, Dwelling for me within the mysterious glass,
The I ...
Lost, lost these fearful, hurried, wasted days.
Now islanded about by silence,
Poised safe upon the twilight Alone, intent, thrice-conscious,
I dare again, I will and

Convinced, convincingly
Out of the glooms of my disparted self It starts, it gathers,
Shines from the mirror, throbs within my heart ;
And gladder than any warrior-ravished bride
My song of triumph flows . . .

Loving the world and by all things adored.

Pilgrim

LJOW often, paused before some brilliant name Shining by thought or will Or glimpsing a modern chief Serenely intent
Upon his purpose undefinable,
How often the shadow of ourselves Projects far forward
Even to touch the titan we admire,
When, heart-leaping, soul-conscious,
Thither, we say, the distance to traverse,
Thither the summit we must still attain.
Our consciousness is never to itself Sufficient and content,
But ever seems
A pilgrim thrust upon an endless way, Toiling to reach
Some ultimate shrine of self contained in self.
The road of life winds upward, upward,
Gathering all types and natures
Into one fate,
Linking the brute to God.
Never a day
Opens our eyes and minds to a new sun
But, thrilled by fear or joy Excessively intense
Pilgrim 51
And startled from ourselves,
We recognize a way that winds in our own soul,
Bidding us follow.
And, looking beyond,
We find nor end, nor pause, nor quiet,
Only the road that winds
Upward and upward,
And the great compulsion of time and change
Goads us along the dizzy, myriad days.
Even death, we feel, but plants new pilgrim feet
Upon the ancient upward pilgrim way.
O, disheartened we lean
Upon our staff of the soul's self-recognition, Pondering the interminable road
And our own worldly burden.
The road of life winds upward, upward,
Strewn with disheartened pilgrims
Even as you and I.

Yet, when we will to yield,
Dismayed by the cold, bleak summits of time,

And toil no more,
Leaving perfection to a tougher soul,
Content to pause midway
With broken staff, closed eyes, and folded hands, (A little slumber, O narcotic sleep !),
Then, opening eyes
After the moment's frantic oblivion,
Then has the landscape changed Unwilled, untoiled-for :

By no labour, no conscious pilgrimage of self
Our soul has gained ascent.

52 Creation
New vistas arise
With pleasurable moods
And, for a little, time has lost its dread.
Then first do we confess a power
Beyond our conscious purpose
Filling the universe of men and things ;
Changing, replacing, creating,
At once here, before us and behind, Planning itself a pilgrimage so vast
That our supreme success would make it fail.
There is a power
Not to be sought, but seeking ;

Holding, not to be held ;
Using, not to be employed ;
Ignoring, not mocking personality,
Shaping the fragments of men and things
Into an order and perfection not our own.
Life is the climber-up !

Life is the pilgrim !

We but a part of the road he treads upon Mounting the cloud-piled hill !

So, being not the climber but the climbed,
Not the eternal pilgrim but the way,
I come to find myself
Circled by a great confidence and peace.
No more shall I attempt,
Blindly afraid, to seize His garment or sandal, and stay Life, the creative, unstaying ;
No more shall I perplex and madden
My sensitive thought

Paradox 53

With torment of a sheer, heart-breaking hill ;

Nay, but thankfully aware
At last, and not too late,
How rightly fits my nature to the world,
Learn to live fully, gratefully within
The perfect here and now
Which life, from full-brimmed pilgrim's wallet, Tosses each soul in passing
Upward and upward
On his mysterious way.
Pass freely along, O life,
God's pilgrim,
Godspeed ! I speed, I release thee !

Paradox

TF I praise death, I feel it by the genius of life :

If I praise life, I speak it within the ears of death.

Fragment

'TTHEIR eyes shine, the rapt boy-gleam that never before Poured out the hearts of strong, world-toughened men,
Shine, and eagerly turn
The one way, Westward,
So many arrows cleaving a single mark ;
And like the wheat in windy acres tossing
Their limbs reach forth
The one way, Westward, all their ardent hands.
Their ardent hands and feet, one rapid, impetuous rhythm
Tosses them, swaying, advancing.

The tapestries of kings superb in battle
Bore never so rich design, Nor rugs that ancient faith made intricate Visioning the fervent soul,
As here
These dancing feet, the citizenship of earth, Responsive, passionate, trace Unconsciously along the echoing street.

I follow.

I join them.

Closer, closer I press me,

Body and spirit

Urged to the central core
Of this new passion warming, transforming men.
Like a strong man bearing proudly aloft his burden
Our slow, deep-rolling voices Carry to heaven a grave and mighty hymn.
We reach to the world's edges Gathering all men and women, Uniting them, creating to one titanic, puissant nature
The myriad moods and passions of the race.
Not one avoids or declines us, impetuously receiving In deepest heart the mutual rapture
Bursting at last the swart frontiers
Of nations, races, hatreds of class and clan.
No master to lead us,
No slave to follow ;
We go.
Creation

Janus

"HTHERE!

Look where the blazing star reels down
To sudden death in some mean stagnant water
That, O friend, is signal to the doom Rushing upon a world, a fair, dear world That dies almost unmourned. But I Die with it in my heart."

"A

My silence questioned him.
world, how shall I tell it ?
So calm, so gracious ? Well,
It lay in little villages apart
Like secrets in a lover's memory ;
In villages where family names and deeds Survived, creating magnanimity ;
And there were albums, birthdays, festivals ;
And old men grave, old women queenly ;
And night enframed each leisurely day in gold ;
Poets were read and known ;
Slow organs breathed along the shadowy street ;
And manners were thought the better part of men October twilight, God it seemed as though
History itself, and all the human race,
Had come each autumn to its perfect fruitage.

Friend, believe me, a fair, dear world lies dead."

Moved by his measured sadness

I rose to score the dead world's epitaph

Janus 57

On starkest rock by distant hills unknown

Where some strayed reveller of future times

Might chance upon it, and had he a soul,

Lament the passing of a kingly race.

But even as I rose I felt about me

The new world shaping in the ancient wreck ;

That modern vision of life, city-haste

But with it city-plenitude ; and souls

Created by the tenser rhythm of crowds ;

No long-maturing names, but freer men ;

And roads hewn out like equatorial belts

From race to race ;

And cloud-lost aeroplanes ; colossal ships ;

Long inter-racial tasks, to unify

A million labourers in a single dream ;

New words, terms, thoughts, the conscious mind

Reached out atiptoe, startled by its wealth ;

New dreams, of art and peace,

Advanced by stouter hearts than Cesar's ;

I felt this world in labour, and I knew

Not death, but birth, had agonized my soul.

Creation

Creator

looked at me ... a woman's eyes

Piercing through and beyond

As there were nothing here,

Nothing, where this heart beats, where this mind labours !

Now the whole daylong I stand

Lost in this strange nothingness,

Seeking . . .

As a shadow might seek the hand that cast it,

As an echo might seek its sound,

... A soul.

I have been with them who run hither and thither

Before the antique silence of a church,

Who kneel at carved dark altars

And sniff wantonly the heady incense ;

They are like those who guard a forgotten fortress, Defending a frontier no hostile army ever will attack.

Long ago a vigorous Life passed by Making terrible battle of being against non-being.
His memory lingers, and these Proud of their strategy and their courage
Creator 59

Take arms and stand before his fading footprints in due array.
The sun glitters on their new swords and buttons,
And death, their only foe, Steals up and crushes them beneath the burden of their unused armour !

May I cast this lie utterly away,
Creep out from this entanglement of memory, Stamp underfoot the secondhand experience men term soul.
This is the lie that fetters the world.
All men save thieves and artists mix its poison with their daily bread.
Soul never existed before,
Will never exist until I give it being in and by myself.

There is no type, no model ;
No path worn sleek by generations of dragging knees
Can lead me to its place.

It is a chaotic nothingness round about my life, Flesh with my hand and eye, thought with my thought ;

It whirls past my finger-tips,
Hides beyond my swiftest imagination.

Here in its midst I stand Lonely as no mortal ever was before,
Confronting it, stern, anguished, half-daunted, Waiting for the great mood gathering power within me.

Soon shall I leap forward for the last time,
Seize the chaos with all my being, godlike,

60 Creation
Creatively shape it into a perfect spirit, self,
Or fall back prostrate, knowing myself no better than dogs and trees.

The blatant legions of triumphant hell

Swing past with reckless booty.

What faith, what sureness of the daily life !

God looked at me. ,

Creation 61

Creation

"^TATURE'S truant and scapegoat.

When I was made the earth held back her flame,

Mixed no prodigious sulphur with my blood ;

Said : Here's one must beg or steal his life

Day by day ;

I'll

give him nothing mine.

How long I crouched apart ;

How long I hated the ample-winged birds,

Envied the sturdy oxen, the swift hound, the painless tree.

When a man passed I wept, bewildered.

How long I begged of water its ease,

Of wind its lightness, of fire its passion.

I crouched apart from laughter and tears ;

Love I knew not, only I knew that hearts with sulphurous blood

Beat grief and rapture through all lives but mine.

All else is perfect j nothing am I, I said.

Then, like a tiny puff of wind on the great sea

Thickened by obdurate calm,

A prayer, a feeble spirit-breath sighed within me.

My hand tightened as for a titan task.

I gazed at it, bewildered,

Said : Nay, another suffering begins ;

Now while the burden of storm and season

And men and things harries the gable of life,

A cunninger spite steals in beside the hearth

62 Creation

To pester the feeble flame.

But, stirring again my thick obdurate calm,

The prayer increased.

My breath drew deep, as for the dance of passion.

What is this ? I cried.

Stronger, stronger it heaved and whirled and swirled.

I could not crouch, I rose, I stood erect, Clenched hand, drew breath.
 Impelled by some new sense not mine, yet mine,
 I leaned swiftly to myself, as to heaped inarticu late clay,
 Moulded the mass to likeness of a dream,
 Fondled the outline to a wondrous curve,
 Gave eyes, ears, breath.
 Hasten, said God : not so in a thousand years Shall man create himself.
 Swifter I laboured, singing.
 Then when the shape fairly answered my desire,
 Answered, contained the vision of things perfect,
 I in my feeble days painfully descried,
 I entered in, assumed it as my own.
 Nature's scapegoat !

While men and beasts drag the burden of nature,
 Her being, loved for her sake, not their own,
 Her need their passion, her desire their power,
 I stand apart with God
 And brood upon the world behind this dream.
 Ecstasy 63

Ecstasy
 /^\ LAST, unassailable perfect triumph of life,
 The very signal of attained being to avidest
 men :

When the bound, slow-groping panting soul
 Abruptly risen to freedom, joyously perceptive
 In presence of some unexpected beautiful thing, Cries out to perish,
 To die all through straightway, and nevermore be,
 Unless, unless it be the universe itself,
 Container of all space and time,
 Container of that very moment of sweet anguish,
 That very death-life cry and the mad, rent spirit ;

Container of itself as the opulent spring contains One clear, articulate bird as the unpartisan year One season of spring whose pomp, whose passing alike

Inspires no pride, no awe returning again.
 How the life-filled spirit of man,
 In its great moment, knows and envies God.

64 Creation

Goal

Firstly, my head bowed in the passing of the soul's first rapture

The day burns calmly and slowly pressed in its brazen bowl

Like incense peacefully consumed by shrines where few men worship;

Odours arising drift and catch at my ivory senses, Weakening an inner power my will, my courage never inspired.

Without ash the day burns out, without pollution; calmly and slow

The day in its brazen bowl consumes the perfumed ash of yesterday.

Mingled in one strange maddening odour the incense of the passing moment

Restores the old, forgotten years. All time returns, a strange perfume.

To-morrow so shall burn, and its to-morrow. No moment wastes and none

Sinks to ashes in the bowl that calmly burns all life away.

My will, my name, my love, my soul consume O God, ;

at last I am.
