

So for example some of his first actions on attaining authority with the ruler of the town of al-Uyayna was to destroy a sacred tomb revered by locals. He also ordered that an adulteress be stoned to death, thus reintroducing a practice which had fallen out of favor. These actions created enemies and he eventually had to flee al-Uyayna. However he ultimately found strong patronage with Muhammed Ibn Saud, a chief of desert raiders in Najd, Ibn Saud. Together they formed a pact which placed the chief as head of the political matters. Muhammad ibn 'Abd al-Wahhab as head of theological matters, declared the rulers of Hijaz (holy Land of Arabia) to be non-Muslims due to their more tolerant practice of Islam and therefore worthy of attack and occupation. Thus the dynasty of the house of Saud eventually conquered most of the Arabian peninsula, and with the discovery of oil and the influx of wealth, projected this ideology around the world.

Shaykh Ahmad

Shaykh Ahmad belonged to the Shi'ite sect of Islam, and as such venerated and adhered to the teachings handed down by the Shi'ite Imams. They believed that the first Imam appointed by Muhammad to succeed him was 'Alí, his cousin and son-in-law, and the first to be his disciple. Shi'ites regarded him as the Guardian of the Faith of Islám and its spiritual head. This appointment, however, was not in writing and there is no mention of it in the Qur'án. It was made verbally to a great number of his followers assembled at a place called the Pool of Khumm. As a result when the prophet passed away, the appointment of 'Alí was challenged by 'Umar, who later became the second Caliph of Islám. He campaigned against 'Alí, repudiating him and his position as the 'Interpreter of the Qur'án', purportedly saying: 'The Book of God is sufficient for us.' He effectively rallied the people instead around the old and venerable person of Abú-Bakr who was installed as the first Caliph. Thus outside of the Shi'ite sect, 'Alí's appointment was not considered conclusive or binding by the majority of the followers of Muhammad.

Shaykh Ahmad believed in the eminent fulfillment of the prophecies in the Qur'án. He also taught a non-literal symbolic interpretation of these prophecies. He saw it as his mission to prepare the world for the coming of the Al-Qa'im or Al-Mahdi and the return of Christ. Contrary to the Wahhabi view, he espoused an extreme veneration for the saints and Imams (decedents of the prophet Muhammad). Ultimately he also achieved much influence in present day Iran and the patronage of the ruling Persian Qajar dynasty.

He preached that the day judgement should be understood in a non-physical manner and that the rising of dead was in terms of their spirit. Sayyid Kázim Rashtí was appointed by him to succeed him and carried his teachings forward after Shaykh Ahmad's passing in 1826. Sayyid Kázim clarified many of Shaykh Ahmad's ideas. He also heightened Shaykh Ahmad's expectations of fulfillment, even devoting much time in describing the attributes of the coming promised one, delineating such details as his lineage, age and comportment. Sayyid Kazim did not leave a successor, but before his death in December, 1843, he had counseled his followers to leave their homes to seek the Mahdi, who according to his prophecies would soon appear. Interestingly this expectation also corresponded with predictions of Christian millennialist movements which were sweeping across America and western Europe.

It was then in May 22 1844 that a relatively unknown merchant named Sayyid Ali Muhammad assumed the title of the Bab or Gate and claimed to be the promised one. Actually his first disciple Mullá Husayn, was one of the chief followers of Sayyid Kazim, who on the death of his leader, set out to search for the promised one. This declaration attracted a number of the more illustrious followers of the Shaykhi school, including the famous poetess and female disciple Fatima Baraghani, named "Solace of the Eyes"("Qurat-ul-Ayn") by Sayyid Kazim.

Facsimile of the Bab's tablet written to Tahirh

The Bab taught that he was preparing the way for another greater messenger of God who would usher in the establishment of the kingdom of God on earth. The Bab's piousness, intoxicating presence, and ability to reveal Arabic writings of profound beauty and depth without premeditation won over many. This despite the fact that he was not from the educated clerical class. This movement spread like fire throughout Persian society attracting converts from all classes of society. However opposition from the ecclesiastical and governmental authorities hardened especially after the famous incident in the Iranian town of Badasht. The early followers of the Bab had gathered together there to decide on how they could liberate their imprisoned leader the Bab. At this meeting was present Qurat-ul-Ayn. During a sermon she gave, she threw off her veil to shock and terror of the assembled men present and announced "I am the Word which the Qá'im is to utter, the Word which shall put to flight the chiefs and nobles of the earth!" This event was so shocking that a few of the believers renounced their faith and fled, another slit his own throat in terror at this sight. This act for Babism signaled the termination of old Islamic sharia law and the birth of a new divine law, which demanded equality for women. Interestingly this coincided with events on the other side of the planet, the first conference to address the emancipation of women was held in Seneca Falls New York near the same time.

Later tales of this incident and the wanton immorality such an act implied, were used by the clerical establishment to excite the populace against the Babism. It was also at this conference where Qurat-ul-Ayn was given yet another new name, Tahirih (The pure one) by another prominent Babi and nobleman, Mírzá Husayn-`Alí who would be known as Bahá'u'lláh (Glory of God). Bahá'u'lláh would years later in 1863 announce that he was the one foretold by the Bab. The overwhelming majority of Babism accepted Bahá'u'lláh and became known as Bahá'ís. In 1852 Tahirih would be executed via strangulation with a silk scarf and thrown into a well on orders of the Shah and clergy. Her last words were reported to have been "You can kill me as soon as you like. But you cannot stop the emancipation of women!"

Links to my other articles on religion and science:

Plato, Modern Physics and Bahá'u'lláh

One Physicist's first Look at Abdu'l-Bahá's Tablet of the Universe

The Known and Unknown: Physics and the Revelation of Bahá'u'lláh

Does the singularity of God require the singularity of Religion?

The Spirit of Faith and Eternal Life

A Talismanic View of Evolution

METADATA

Views10420 views since posted 2021-03-31; last edit 2025-03-09 14:51 UTC;

previous at archive.org.../ranjbar\_al-wahhab\_shaykh\_ahmad

Language

English

Permission

fair use

Share

Shortlink: bahai-library.com/5615

Citation: ris/5615

select Collection:

Archives

Articles

Articles-unpublished

Audio

Bibliographies

BIC

Biographies

Books

Chronologies

Compilations

Compilations-NSA

Compilations-personal

Documents

East-asia

Encyclopedia

Essays

Etc

Excerpts

Fiction

Glossaries

Guardian

Histories

Introductory

Letters

Maps

Music
Newspapers
NSA-documents
NSA-letters
Personal
Pilgrims
Poetry
Presentations
Resources
Reviews
Scripts
Software
Statistics
Study
Talks
Theses
Transcripts
Translations
UHJ-documents
UHJ-letters
Video Visual Writings

home

sitemap

series

chronology

search:

author

title

date

tags

adv. search

languages

inventory

bibliography

abbreviations

links

about

contact

RSS

new

— Muhammad ibn 'Abd al-Wahhab and Shaykh Ahmad (Used by permission of the curator)